At a Meeting of the Council of the Surtees Society, held in Durham Castle on Tuesday, December 6th, 1892, Mr. Greenwell in the Chair,

It was ordered,

That the Yorkshire Chantry Certificates should be edited for the Society by Mr. William Page.

PREFACE.

THERE is no instance in the certificates here printed of a chantry founded prior to the Conquest, although it would seem probable that such foundations would have then existed, seeing that prayers for the dead formed one of the principal provisions in the ordinances of Anglo-Saxon Guilds.[1] Whether the earlier chantries had become disused or whether the custom of founding them did not come into use till the fourteenth century it is difficult to determine, but it is curious to notice that when monasteries ceased to be founded, chantries seem to have begun. It would appear that before the thirteenth century those who desired to have masses said for the repose of their souls, if they were wealthy, founded monasteries, but if they were otherwise, left legacies to their parish priest or made contributions for that purpose to some guild. Nearly the whole of the monasteries in Yorkshire were founded before the year 1200 and excluding the friaries, colleges, and hospitals, Haltemprice and the Carthusian houses, they were all founded before 1250.[2] For the next fifty years after the latter date we have foundations of friaries and hospitals, and then, probably on account of the more equal distribution of wealth and the growing importance of the middle classes, the less expensive foundations of chantries and hospitals were adopted in the place of monasteries. From 1300 to 1350 there were founded nearly a quarter of the chantries, the dates of whose foundations are given in these certificates, before which time there had been, according to the same source, less than a dozen such foundations in Yorkshire.[3] The largest number of foundations of chantries and chapels in Yorkshire was from 1450 to 1500.

(1) The doctrine of the efficacy of prayer in alleviating the sufferings of purgatory was introduced in the seventh century (Chetham Soc. vol. lix. p. iv.)

(2) See Tanner's Notitia.

(3) On the certificates for Yorkshire taken under the commission of Henry VIII. there are returned 402 foundations, of which eleven were before 1300, but of the accuracy of the dates of some of these there is considerable doubt; from 1300 to 1350 there were 58; from 1350 to 1400, 48; from 1400 to 1450, 28; from 1450 to 1500, 61; from 1500 to the Dissolution, 47; and 149 undated. Of the 253 dated foundations there were 5 guilds, 9 hospitals, 5 colleges, and 10 prebends, the remainder being chantries, chapels, and stipendiaries.

Of the foundations brought within the Acts of 37 Henry VIII. and 1 Edward VI. by far the largest number were chantries, which were founded either in perpetuity or for term of years. Most of those in Yorkshire were of the former nature, the latter in these certificates are generally termed stipendiaries or services. A chantry was sometimes founded at an existing altar in a church and was often moved from one altar to another; sometimes again it was founded in a side chapel, specially built, adjoining to the church, or at times in a chapel detached from the church either in the churchyard or, as was constantly the case in Yorkshire, some miles from the parish church. In founding chantries in perpetuity, a licence to grant lands in mortmain had to be obtained from the Crown, many of which licences are given in notes to the certificates here printed. All chantries were dependent upon the parish church, and the chantry priests usually assisted the parochial clergy in their ministrations, and often had to give some evidence of their subjection. For the most part the chantries were founded by individuals for the benefit of themselves or their friends, but in some cases they were founded by guilds or the inhabitants of a district for the welfare of a community, and, as seems to have been very frequent in Yorkshire, for the ease of the inhabitants of some outlying hamlet where the people could not get to their parish church in winter time owing to the flooded state of a river or other impediment; others in the large towns were provided for those infected with the plague, which suggests the constant recurrence of that scourge of the middle ages; and some again were founded to say the morrow mass for strangers labouring on their journeys, artisans, and young folk. At some few chantries the priests were bound to teach a certain number of children of the parish in which they served. But at all chantries there was a founder for the repose of whose soul masses had to be sung, although it appears from these certificates, that in some instances the founder's name had long been forgotten.

Hospitals were usually places provided for the reception of poor and impotent persons. Although returned on the certificates of both Henry VIII. and Edward VI., these foundations came only within the terms of the statute of 37 Henry VIII. for dissolving chantries, the statute of 1 Edward VI. does not apparently include them. Most, if not all of the hospitals which are returned on the certificates here printed were left undissolved, and many remain to this day, and are now generally used as almshouses, but the funds of a few of them have been applied to educational purposes. Many of the hospitals seem to have been in great poverty and became much neglected. At the hospital of St. Mary Magdalene of Bawtry, it is said the poor were relieved up to 1572, and divine service and prayers were weekly said in the chapel, but afterwards the master, for the time being, let the buildings get into decay, pulled down a dovecot and part of the mansion house, defaced the chapel, carried away the ornaments and furniture of the same, namely, the stalls, books, and altar table; took the lead from the roof, and converted the chapel itself into a pig-sty.[1] Much the same treatment was meted out to like foundations.

Colleges were like large chantries at which three or more secular priests lived in common. Several of these foundations existed in Yorkshire, notably the collegiate church of Beverley, the college of St. William at York, the Vicars Choral at York, the college of St. Andrew in Stillingfleet, the college of the Trinity in Pontefract, the Vicars Choral at Ripon, and some others.

Free chapels were exempt from episcopal jurisdiction, and were at first the King's private property.

Guilds, brotherhoods, and fraternities are too well known to need a definition. It was only those of a religious or social character that came within the operation of these Acts, those for trade purposes were specially exempted therefrom. It is curious, however, to note how few guilds are returned in these certificates, only five altogether for the whole of Yorkshire. Of the famous guilds of St. John the Baptist and of the Lord's Prayer at York, of St. Mary, St. Wilfred, and All Saints of Ripon, of the Holy Cross at Rotherham, of St. Ellen, St John, Corpus Christi, and the Blessed Virgin at Beverley; and St. John the Baptist, Corpus Christi, and the Blessed Virgin Mary at Kingston upon Hull, which are returned on the certificates made in the reign of Richard II., there is no mention here.

(1) Excheq. Depositions 34 and 35 Eliz. Mich. 33. This document gives the names of various masters of the hospital and mentions "a deed book" of Henry I. relating to the same.

Obits and anniversaries were services performed yearly in commemoration of the death of the founder either in perpetuity or for term of years. Alms were usually distributed at such services. The yearly profit on stocks of money, cattle, and goods, and the annual sums payable out of the possessions of colleges, free chapels, or chantries which were to be distributed to the poor, were, under the statute of 1 Edward VI., to have continuance, but money given to finding a priest, lamp, or light was confiscated.

One point is brought strongly to light in the York Certificates, and that is the impoverishment of the various foundations consequent upon the agricultural depression. For this reason the Vicars Choral lacked sixteen of their number, Bootham Hospital ceased to be able to support the poor priests for whom it was founded, the yearly charges of the guild of Corpus Christi exceeded the revenues, the distribution of alms bequeathed by pious persons at St. Helen's, Stangate, and Holy Cross churches in York were discontinued, the Hospital of Well had to reduce the number of its inmates by ten, and it was the same tale at St. Michael's, Hull, and many other Yorkshire foundations. The dissolution of the chantries was it seems under consideration at the same time as that of the monasteries, for so early as 1529[1] an Act was passed forbidding any spiritual person, either secular or regular, after the feast of Michaelmas, to receive any stipend or salary for singing masses for the souls of the dead. About five years afterwards the survey of ecclesiastical possessions known as the Valor Ecclesiasticus was compiled, which comprised a valuation of the chantries throughout England. It was not, however, till the Parliament of 37 Henry VIII. [A.D. 1545] that the question of dissolving the chantries was officially brought forward, when an Act was passed giving powers to Henry VIII. during his natural life to dispose of all colleges, free chapels, chantries, hospitals, fraternities, brotherhoods, guilds, and stipendiary priests in England and Wales. The Act recites that many of the donors, founders, and patrons of such foundations had of late entered upon the lands belonging to the same, expelling the incumbents, and that some of the priests had conveyed away and made long leases of the lands for their own benefit. These charges are to some extent exemplified in Yorkshire. That the patrons were trying to resume the lands and possessions of the chantries we find several instances:—At Metham the patron, Thomas Metham, was resisted in such design by the chantry priest himself;[1] at Holme Chantry in the Church of the Trinities in Gotherum Gate, York, the patron had seized the chalice[2]; at Catterick, Sir Ralph Bulmer laid claim to the land of the Chantry of Our Lady[3]; at North Allerton, Lord Dacre and Sir Charles Brandon had seized the lands belonging to the Maison Dieu and converted them to their own use[4]; at Halifax, Sir Edmund Ackroyd had treated the lands of the Frith Chantry in the same way[5]; at Burnsall the lands of the Chantry of Our Lady in the Chapel of Rilstone had been sold by Jeffrey Proctor to the Earl of Cumberland; at Wathe, half an acre of land of the Chantry of St. John the Baptist had been seized by Thomas Markenfield[6]; at Conisborough, certain of the lands of the Chantry of Our Lady were dealt with in like manner.[7] Accusations were also brought against the wardens of the Guilds of St. Christopher and St. George of York for misappropriating funds,[8] and like practices were hinted at against the warden of Corpus Christi Guild.[9] The second accusation, however, of the chantry priests having conveyed away the possessions of the chantries is not borne out by these certificates. It is possible they may have granted leases of the lands at low rentals for large considerations, as was done by some of the abbots and priors previous to the dissolution, but this would not probably appear on these certificates.

The preamble to the Act states that the proceeds of the sale of the chantry property should be devoted to the expenses of the French and Scotch wars, and the Act ordains that commissioners should be appointed to survey and seize to the King's use the lands of such chantries, hospitals, etc., as should be named in their commissions. The commissioners for Yorkshire were appointed on 14 February, 1546, they were directed to inquire as to the names of the incumbents and founders, the purpose of the foundations, and their necessities, they were to take inventories of the plate and goods and a survey of the possessions. The returns to this commission are here printed, and they appear to have been made in a very impartial business-like way. By the death of Henry VIII. so shortly after the passing of this Act, the powers therein, being only granted to the King for term of his life, were but partially enforced, commissions were issued to survey the chantries and other foundations and certificates thereto made; but as regards Yorkshire, few if any chantries were dissolved under this Act, in cases, however, where the incumbents of chantries happened to die after the passing of the Act the chantries were left vacant. Upon the meeting of Parliament after the accession of Edward VI. another Act was passed to enable the ministers of Edward VI. to receive the benefits accruing to the Crown under the earlier Act. It is worthy of notice that whereas the statute of Henry VIII. states boldly that money was required for the war against the French and Scotch, and therefore the possessions of the chantries and other foundations could be conveniently sold to provide the same, the statute of Edward VI. gives doctrinal reasons for their dissolution, and states that "a great part of superstition and errors in Christian religion hath been brought into the minds and estimations of men by reason of the ignorance of their very true and perfect salvation through the death of Jesus Christ, and by devising and phantasying vain opinions of purgatory and masses satisfactory to be done for them which be departed, the which doctrine and vain opinion by nothing more is maintained and upholden than by abuse of trentals, chantries, and other provisions made for the continuance of the said blindness and ignorance." The preamble then goes on to suggest that the possessions of the same foundations might be better bestowed in erecting grammar schools, augmenting the Universities, and making provision for the poor and needy. The later Act extended to anniversaries, obits, and lamps, and provided for new commissioners to be appointed to again survey the chantries and other foundations, but the articles of enquiry supplied to the commissioners were of a different nature to those of Henry VIII. relating more to the characters of the incumbents and the necessity of the foundations, and the whole Act is fuller and more carefully drawn. Thirteen commissioners were appointed for Yorkshire under the later Act, three more than in the earlier; four of the commissioners, viz., the Archbishop of York, William Babthorpe, Robert Chaloner, and Thomas Gargrave serving under both commissions. Notwithstanding that the certificates under both Acts were most carefully checked and compared, and every little discrepancy noted,[1] a large amount of lands and possessions was concealed from the commissioners which was the reason of so many commissions being issued to inquire after "lands given to superstitious uses" in the reigns of Queen Elizabeth and later sovereigns.[2] It was not the lands alone that were hidden from the commissioners, for in an account of the particular receiver of the goods and ornaments of the chantries made in the reign of Philip and Mary (1556) allowance is claimed on account of ornaments "grown in ruin and great decay and much thereof embezzled by the incombents and others, that by estimation they are not worth the fourth part as they be valued in the first certificate."[3] A serious charge was also in the same year brought against two of the commissioners, Sir Nicholas Fairfax and William Lakyns, that they had despoiled the chapel of Colthorpe in the lordship of Raskelf of its lead roofing to the value of 100*li.*, and when they expected that the chapel might be refounded by Queen Mary "they have taken order to cover the said chapel again with straw only."[4] The churchwardens of various Yorkshire parishes were very unwilling to give up the stocks of money in their charge for various purposes, and numerous "privy seals" issued against them will be found amongst the Land Revenue Records of the latter part of the reign of Edward VI. and the beginning of that of Queen Mary.

The excellent proposals that the possessions of the foundations dissolved under these Acts should be converted to educational and charitable purposes was not long entertained, for we find by an order in Council of the 17th April, 1548, it is pointed out that the Crown was unable to support the charges of sundry fortifications and levying of men, and it was likely that expeditions would have to be sent into Scotland and Ireland, for which the Lord Protector and the Council perceived "nothing to be so much lacking as money," and considering that in the late Parliament the King's loving subjects "were induced the rather and franklier to grant to the King all colleges, chantries, free chapels," etc., that they might thereby be relieved of the continual charge of taxes, therefore the Council had unanimously agreed that so much of the chantry lands should be sold as should attain to the value of 5,000*li.* a year, and that Sir Walter Mildmay, knight, and Robert Calwey should be appointed commissioners for the sale of such lands.[1] These same commissioners appear to have been further instructed to inquire and to decide what schools, preachers, priests, and curates it was desirable should be continued throughout England. They were appointed for this purpose on the 20th June, 1548, and their return for Yorkshire is dated on that day month. They recommended in their report that it was necessary to have one to assist in serving the cure at Topcliffe on account of the great number of houseling people, and that William Topham, incumbent of the late chantry in the manor of Topcliff, should be appointed to such cure at the yearly salary of 100*s.*; that it was meet to continue a grammar school at Northallerton, formerly supported by the revenues of the late guild there, and that John Foster should be appointed schoolmaster at the salary of 10l*s.* 4*d.*; that the grammar school at Bedale should be continued and John Grey appointed master at a salary of 7*li.* 11*s.* 4*d.*; that the chapel of Bolton upon Swale in the parish of Catterick, being a mile and more distant from the parish church and "secluded by water" in winter time, should be continued as a chapel of ease, and Christopher Johnson appointed minister there at a yearly wage of 38*s.*; that the chapel of Redmire in the parish of Wensley, being distant from the parish church two miles, should be continued for the administration of sacraments, and that Robert Kirkeby should minister there at a yearly wage of 5*li.* 8*s.* 8*d.*; that the chapel of All Hallows in Thoralby in the parish of Aysgarth, being two miles distant from the parish church, should be continued for sacraments and divine service, and that Adam Middleham should serve the same chapel for the yearly wage of 4*li.* 15*s.* 4*d.*; that the chapel of Leeming in the parish of Burniston, distant from the parish church, was a chapel of ease and meet to be continued, and should be served by John Kaye at the yearly wage of 65*s.* 4*d.*; that it was meet to have a priest to assist in the cure of the parish church of Scarborough, and that Richard Chapman, incumbent of the late chantry of Our Lady in Scarborough, should assist in the same cure at the salary of 13*s.* 4*d.*; and that it was necessary to have an assistant to aid in serving the cure of the parish church of Richmond, and that John Brokhole, incumbent of the late chantry of St. Anne and St. Katherine should be appointed to assist in the cure of the said parish at a salary of 4*li.* 15*s.* 8*d.*[1] Besides the foundations above set out as having been continued it seems that others were permitted to remain undissolved, for by some depositions taken in 1606 it appears that the free chapel or chantry of Ayton, although stripped of its possessions, was still kept up by the inhabitants for their convenience, by a self-imposed rate, viz., a husbandman giving 8*d.*, a cottager having cattle 4*d.*, and a cottager having no cattle 2*d.* a quarter.[2] By statute 1 Edward VI., cap. 14, discretionary powers were given to the commissioners or any two of them to continue such grammar schools, supported by the revenues of chantries, as they considered necessary, and several schools were in this way or by grant from the Crown continued, viz., Topcliff, Rotherham, Hull, Stillingfleet, Malton, Skipton in Craven, Giggleswick, Sedburgh, Normanton, Pocklington and Pontefract,[3] while those at Thirsk, Long Preston, Aldborough, and Richmond were apparently dissolved to be in most cases refounded some years later. The possessions of several of the schools which were continued were augmented, but it does not seem that any grammar school was founded by Edward VI. at any town in Yorkshire where one had not previously existed.[4] The administration of the Protector Somerset brought about more urgent necessities than the foundation of grammar schools, and we find from the Privy Council Registers that over 25,000*li.*, a sum that could be multiplied by 20, as is generally considered, to represent the present equivalent, was realized by the sale of chantry lands between July and December 1548, and expended upon the expedition into Scotland, by the Admiralty, and upon pensions to various officers and court officials. Educational endowments had to be left for later reigns, and largely to private munificence, the unique opportunity which the dissolution of the chantries presented for advancing the cause of education was practically lost.

The Yorkshire chantries were not dissolved without opposition. In 1548 the inhabitants of Seamer near Scarborough and the neighbourhood rose under the leadership of William Ambler of East Heslerton, yeoman, Thomas Dale, parish clerk of Seamer, and one Stevenson, and in the night set the beacon alight at Staxton, collecting a company of about 3,000 persons, who went to the house of Matthew White, one of the commissioners under the Act of Edward VI. and particular receiver of chantry lands, and dragged him, one Clapton, his wife's brother, one Savage, supposed to have been Richard Savage, sheriff of York in 1540, and one Berry, servant to Sir Walter Mildmay, one of the commissioners for the sale of chantry lands, from their beds and carried them to the wolds near Seamer, and there murdered them. The insurrection was soon quelled, and the leaders were executed at York on 21st September, 1549.[1]

Little time was wasted in disposing of the possessions of the chantries; for the most part they were leased out to divers persons for 21 years immediately after the certificates were returned into the Court of Augmentations, and they were not all absolutely conveyed away by the Crown till the time of the Stuarts. Many of the lands, however, were sold at once, William Paulet, Lord St. John, being a purchaser of a very large amount of chantry lands in 1549.[2] Much of the Yorkshire chantry lands came to the hands of those unscrupulous informers, Tipper and Daw, who obtained a grant from the Crown in 1591 of "lands concealed from the Crown" which included much property of this nature. Some of the patrons of chantries disputed the right of the Crown to seize property given by their predecessors for a specific object and in a few cases successfully maintained their cause upon some technical point as in the case of the chantry of St. Anne, Askrigg.[1] ; others, again, like Sir William Drury and Sir John Constable in the case of a chantry in Wakefield church, petitioned the Crown to return them the lands granted as endowments by their ancestors.[2]

In consequence of the amount of print which these certificates occupy being greater than was anticipated, it has been determined to divide the volume into two parts. The preface will be continued in the second part, where it is proposed to treat of the condition of the incumbents of the chantries and other foundations. The index will appear in the second part. The lists of church furniture for the county will also be printed for the Society.
